

NC State University College of Design
 Designing Communities for Healthy Living
 February 5, 2005, 8:30 am to 4:30 pm in downtown Raleigh

Sponsorship Information

Designing Communities for Healthy Living will provide practical learning experiences for designers, planners, government officials and public health professionals to design or facilitate environments that encourage physical activity and promote mixed-use development. Experts on design and public health will make the link between the built environment and physical activity and highlight design strategies for promoting healthy, active living. Topics covered will include neighborhood design (new and infill), work and school environments, green infrastructure, transportation and government planning and codes that promote such environments.
